

In Support of Women's Rights and Human Rights in Iran

The Women's Association of Yaran (WAY), committed to the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and inspired by the movement "Woman, Life, Freedom," expresses its solidarity with the lives, dignity, and fundamental rights of the people of Iran.

For many years, the Iranian people, especially women and youth, have faced various forms of oppression, discrimination, and widespread human rights violations. In recent days, nationwide protests have been met with alarming levels of violence with credible reports of deaths, injuries, and the destruction of property. Yet, they continue to assert the right to life, freedom, and justice.

Today, these peaceful and civic efforts face an additional threat: the risk of war and foreign military violence. History shows that civilians are the ones who suffer the most due to such conflicts, undermining the possibility of sustainable change.

In solidarity with the people of Iran, we affirm fundamental human rights, including the right to life and security, freedom of expression, peaceful protest, and self-determination. We oppose all forms of repression and external aggression.

In this regard, we call on human rights and women's rights organizations, networks, and activists around the world to stand alongside the people of Iran and their human rights demands; to amplify the voices of protesting citizens; and to urge all governments and international bodies to explicitly condemn the systematic violations of human rights in Iran.
